

Assistant Professor

The University of Iowa's Department of Sociology invites applications for a tenure track position at the Assistant Professor level with research and teaching emphases in the area of criminology or criminal justice systems. The position will begin in the Fall 2019. The Department of Sociology is home to a major in Criminology, Law and Justice, and we seek strong candidates who show strong promise and evidence of ability to pursue ambitious research programs in criminology, including publications and external funding, and who have excellent teaching skills or potential. We also seek candidates who can contribute to other areas of departmental strength. Applicants should have a Ph.D. in Sociology, Criminology, or related field in hand by August 16, 2019.

For information on how to apply, please visit <http://jobs.uiowa.edu/> and reference Requisition #73050. Formal screening will begin on September 1, 2018 and will continue until the position is filled. Electronic attachments to the online application should include a letter of interest, curriculum vitae, research statement, copies of selected scholarly papers, any evidence of teaching experience or effectiveness, and email contact information for three letters of recommendation. After applying, references will be sent a link to electronically upload their letters of recommendation. Informal inquiries about the position can be directed to jennifer-glanville@uiowa.edu (Chair of Sociology).
