Please join the Crime & Justice Research Alliance \(CJRA\) and the Consortium of Social Science Associations \(COSSA\) for our fourth annual “Ask a Criminologist” Congressional briefing with leading criminology experts from around the country exploring the most important topics in crime, justice, policing and national security. These briefings provide an opportunity for Congressional staff and key stakeholders to engage directly with the experts conducting research on a range of public safety and justice system topics.

This briefing, held via Zoom, will explore the intersection between law enforcement and residents during an extremely complicated time. Highly publicized deaths of community members, primarily Black men, during encounters with police have generated national protests, unrest, and political action. Legislation mandating civilian review boards, task forces reviewing police use of force policies, and calls to “defund” the police are now common. Federal legislation addressing a variety of policing topics and reforms is pending in Congress. Redefining encounters between police and residents could dramatically influence perceptions and trust in the police. Discussions on police practices, community relations, policy implications, and evidence-based strategies for improving police-community relations will be followed by a Q&A session.

Panelists will include Dr. Jennifer Cobbina, Associate Professor of Criminal Justice at Michigan State; Dr. Rod Brunson, Thomas O’Neill Chair of Criminology at Northeastern University; and Dr. Everette Penn, Professor of Criminal Justice at University of Houston Clear Lake and founder of the Teen and Public Service Center. The panel will be moderated by Dr. William V. Pelfrey, Jr., Professor of Criminal Justice in the Wilder School at Virginia Commonwealth University.
